Re: Heneghan and Associates Employee Attends First Session of Six Part Training

Project Manager, Curt Westrich, a 12-year employee with Heneghan and Associates, P.C., recently attended the first part of a six part training program being offered by the American Council of Engineering Companies in Illinois (ACEC-IL) in Naperville.

The program is designed to provide career development for the future leaders of consulting engineering firms in Illinois. The training is geared toward effective leadership and planning for the engineering firms' future.

“This is not your traditional type of training,” Westrich said. “It’s actually very participatory. For example, the first session on business etiquette included actually eating at a fine-dining restaurant while focusing on social etiquette. Very clever.”

The remaining six sessions will occur periodically through the end of the year. Westrich has led Heneghan’s Godfrey office since it was first established in 2003. Heneghan and Associates has provided civil engineering, surveying, and a host of other services to local, county, and state government, residential and commercial developers for the past 22 years.
